AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

The detective story has been described as a puzzle in a book instead of in a box. The puzzle invented by Messrs. Watson and Reed is perhaps best characterized in the words of the wine merchant—"full bodied and full flavored." It is all that a detective story should be, one of those rare books that will intrigue and entertain even those for whom the genre generally has no attraction. It is not merely a matter of juggling with false clews; the murder of Sir Horace Fewbanks, a High Court Judge, in his residence at Hempstead, is in reality a complicated one. Scotland Yard is right in following up the track it has nosed out before it is cold. Crewe, the amateur detective, on leaving the Last year G. P. The German Case

The Jackson Press of this city publishes "Germany's Economic Power of Resistance." by Professor Gustav Cassel, of the University of Stockholm, who visited the empire in the course of the present year to gather the material for his book. The result of his investigations indicates that, in the matter of food and of money, Germany is fully equipped for the continuance of the struggle. Another German book on the war announced by the Jackson Press is a translation of Count von Reventlow's "The Vampire of the Continent." Three hundred copies of this book, sent to this country, were confiscated by the British. Only one copy got through, on board the submarine Deutschland. Our Senses

Our Senses
